DO YOU WANT MONEY

If so, do not fail to set our rates before borrowing.

We make loans on furniture, pianos, horses, wagons,
&c., without removal or publicity, at the lowest possible rates and in the quickest possible time.

Loans can be paid in part or in full at any time to suit the convenience of the borrower, and any past paid reduces the cost of carrying the loan in proportion to the amount paid.

If you have a loan with other parties or have purchased furniture or other soods on time and find the payments a little larger than you can meet conveniently we will take it up and carry the loan for you.

There is no delay, but you get the money the day yon ask for it. Inere is no delay, but you get the money the day you sak for it. It will be to your advantage to see us before secur-ing a loan.

Mr. Henry Johnson of 149 Monroe street writes to THE STAR as follows respecting the suggested location of the contagious disease hospital in the vicinity of Anacostia: Patients would have to be carried over a wooden bridge trian to traverse that distance within two feet of the pest wagon, to say nothing of the street spreader. There is located in Anacostia an institution the inmates of which by reason of their being bereft of reason are objects of our hearts best sympathy. I refer to the hospital for the insane. I ask in the name of Christian humanity that the unfortunute children of God therein be allowed to enjoy unstintingly all that is left to them in this world—the pure air of heaven untainted by infectious atmospheric surroundings. I also plead for the inmates of the German Orphan Asylum, located in the environs. Keep the danger of pestilential diseases from the only home they have—let them and visiting friends be free from contamination, and let them breathe the pure and underways and let them breathe the pure and underways residence size in any event it is hardly probable that to an opportunity for an extension along H street. The Railroad Company Blameless. Yesterday afternoon an inquest was held at the sixth police precinct over the body of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad at 1st street and Virginia avenue southwest. The testimony of several bystanders and railroad people was heard, and the jury after a few mopeople was neard, and the jury after a few mo-meuts' deliberation rendered a verdict to the effect that the man came to his death through his own carelessness and held the railroad blameless in the matter. It appeared from the evidence that the unfortunate man in passing down 1st street found a train of empty passenger cars standing at the crossing, and being in a hurry to get past Armistead, despite the gate man's warning, passed under the lowered gates, jumped upon one of the cars and then jumped on the opposite track, almost directly in front of a passing engine. The engine was running slowly, and only the first wheel passed over the

The depreciation in the value of property owing to the proximity of stables is a serious phase of the case. So is the effect on the health of the people living in the locality. In addition there are the odors which are not of the choicest or the most grateful, which everybody within a square or so are obliged to endure. There are places where private stables can be erected where their presence does not inflict any special hardship on any one. What is thought to be needed is some change in the existing regulations, which will require that such provide here. some change in the existing regulations, which will require that such permits to build be issued only after a careful examination of the locality to determine whether the stable will be opposed to the interests of a majority of the residents. This arrangement is an excellent one for the owner of the house to which the stable belongs, but is not so favorable for the occupants of the houses on the other side of THE REGULATIONS NOT REGARDED. It goes without saying that these manure pits in the care of the stable men are not kept in a cleanly fashion, and the inspection force of the health department, with the help of the police, is not sufficient to compel a permanent reform in this direction. The alleys are used as a part of the stable, and in good weather most of the of the stable, and in good weather most of the work is done there in full sight of the residences on the opposite side of the alley. Building Inspector Entwisle stated this week to a representative of the Building Register that the plans submitted to him so far this season show a class of houses that will excel those of any previous year. "Our weekly round of the offices of the architects and builders of the the offices of the architects and builders of the District," the Register states, "indicates that the unusual promise of increase in the building business, which we remarked at the opening of the season, will be maintained during the year. The inspector of building's office on one day last week issued permits for forty-two new houses. This kind of a text needs no enlargement to satisfy all reasonable minds as to the continued prosperity of the District. We are happy to note that the transactions in real estate show the same steady character in this branch of the business as that indicated by the early part of the season."

These charges are not met by counter statements on the part of McAlester and his friends who appeared before the committee, who say that they were only filed because it was a last resort to effect if possible his defeat, and that the men making them had been candidates for the place to which he was appointed. No sworn statements were submitted to the committee, but among those who appeared in behalf of McAlester were himself, CoL Duvall of Fort Smith, Maj. The saber and the lance are the distinctive weapons of the cavalry, pure and simple, and it is not often that the cavalryman actually cuts down or impales his antagonist. But it is argued in behalf of the saber that its possession gives the soldier confidence in himself, and in a charge the flashing blades and the rattling scabbards make no small impression on the minds of the troops awaiting them. Gen. Carr, who has spent a life in the cavalry, believes that the lance is the superior of the saber in its that the lance is the superior of the saber in its influence on the mind of the man at its buttend as well as at its point. The possession of a weapon that he can reach out with and on which he might with good luck impale an weapon that he can reach out which he might with good luck impale an enemy several feet in front of his horse's nose would give the cavalry soldier that sense of invincibility which he needs to give him dash. At the same time a charging line of spear points might perhaps seem more appailing to the troops attacked than the spectacle of sword blades brandished wildly in the air.

The other is a passenger and freight line to be called the Scandia line, the terminal ports being New York and Stettin, on the Baltic. It being New York and Stettin, on the Baltic. It is operated by the Hamburg-American Packet Company and gives direct communication between this country and several ports heretofore off main lines of traves. One of these is Gothenberg. Chas. H. Shephard, United States consul there, reports that the Gothia on her initial departure thence for the United States carried 255 Swedes en route to New York. The new line is composed of six vessels, and the sailings will be fortnightly.

An Index of Appropriations.

Doubtless the men in the regular service are in the army long enough to master the lance, but our wars we shall nave to fight with volunteers. Most of our people know something about firearms and have some taste for them; they can be soon made reasonably efficient with the pistol and carbine. The saber they are wholly untrained for, but they can learn to use it well not often be required to literally cross swords. But the lance—that is quite another matter. There would be no time to teach the volunteers the use of that weapon, and as the volunteers the use of that weapon, and as the volunteer cavalry must learn their business from the regular cavalry there are objections to arming the regulars with weapons the voluntees on appròpriations are engaged upon a compilation of the legislation of the last Congress, which, when finished, will show all appropriations that have to arming the regulars with weapons the volun-teers can't use.

But Gen. Carr's reputation and experience as a cavalry officer entitle his recommendation to outweigh many theoretical objections, and it would be interesting to see the lance experi-ment tried with a regiment of cavalry. Perhaps it would be wise to have a few regiments of pure cavalry in our service, leaving to the other mounted regiments in the regular service and to the volunteers the duties of dragoons. been created, the offices abolished, the salaries increased and the salaries reduced. The work will be complete and accompanied by an index that will make it one of ready reference. It will not be ready before the first of May. BOUND TO MAKE A RECORD.

The rifle committees of the various commands in the second regiment seem to be attending closely to business. Capt. Bell attending closely to business. Capt. Bell called them together for a meeting on Thursday evening, and good results may be expected of the free consultation which took place. It is evident that all possible effort will be made to bring every man in the regiment to the gallery to complete his scores or to improve those he has already made. GETTING READY FOR THE BANGE.

This afternoon Gen. Ordway, accompani by Maj. Harries, Lieut. Averill of company C of the engineer battalion and two or three offi-cers of the department of rifle practice, went down to the Believue range to make arrange-ments for commencing operations in connec-tion with its equipment. As soon as possible Lieut. Averill will take a party of surveyors to the ground, and when the firing points and target pits have been located the working force will settle down to business.

A cable dispatch from Scotland says that the 100-ton cutter which is being built by Fife for the syndicate of Scotch yachtsmen is to be named the "White Heather." NEXT WEEK'S SCHEDULE.
